Trail Blazing Travel Destinations Report More Visitors and Increased Economic Impact

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. (September 28, 2017) — Travel destinations that create and market a themed trail cite greater visitations and improved economic impact.

The Texas Historical Commission's study reported the Texas Heritage Trails program saw a 2 percent increase in revenue and a 13.9 percent increase in visitation. In Kent County, Mich., home to Grand Rapids' Beer City Ale Trail, 42,000 beer tourists with over 13,000 from outside the state are responsible for driving a $12 million dollar economic impact each year.

Tourism expert and destination marketer Lynn Fuhler, a principal of Flying Compass, strongly endorses the development of themed trails. Selecting popular but unique themes or, alternately, those assets in abundance in a city or region assures the spotlight shines brightly on a destination.

“A true trail experience is unguided, multidimensional and goes beyond a list of places,” advises Fuhler. “It shares a story, creates a connection and engages the visitor by weaving in related activities. For instance, a wine trail could incorporate an art exhibit on wine labels, a stop at a local wine shop devoted to local wines or include a list of restaurants serving wine from local vineyards.”

Recreation trails are typically used by residents while hiking and nature trails draw visitors and locals. Themed trails are geared towards visitors and showcase topics such as arts, architecture, crafts – pottery and quilts, craft beer, culture, gardens, history and heritage, moonshine, scenic beauty, shopping, vineyards and wine, among others.

As the principal of Flying Compass and noted tourism author, Lynn can talk about:

- Why breweries and wineries are lining up to participate in craft beer and wine trails.
- The types of things visitors will discover when traveling down theme trails.
- What visitors should include in every vacation or weekend getaway.
- Understanding the economic impact of tourism.
- The importance of delivering themed trails in brochure format and on electronic devices.
